Subject: Microsoft Settlement

Microsoft may be have the lions share of the market but they have acheived this without trying to invoke any undue pressure on their customers to purchase their products. It should also be noted that despite their advantage in the market place they have continued to innovate and improve their products responding to the consumers needs while maintaining very fair and competitive pricing. It is un American and contrary to the core principle of free enterprise to penalize any company for achieving success. Rather the government should encourage innovation through tax credits and encourage smaller companies to achieve leadership status in their respective fields. A comprehensive settlement has been reached and it is time for our nation to look toward solving our economic problems rather than continuing this costly suit against one of our country s most successful companies.
